Beginning in 2008, an informal group of social scientists from Tecnologico de Monterrey, Mexico, University of Catania, Italy and Mississippi State University, U.S.A. initiated a study designed to monitor the social climate for Hispanic immigration in the United States.

“Immigration should be looked at least from both sides of the border.”

Survey Methodology

- ❑ Sources that guided our study: Pew Hispanic, Gallup Poll and Polling Report
- ❑ Data was collected by the Wolfgang Frese Survey Research Laboratory of the SSRC at MSU. Funded by SSRC
- ❑ Random-digit-dialing (RDD) sampling procedure
- ❑ Weighted according to 2000 census figures by ethnicity, gender, age and education.
- ❑ 1,505 telephone interviews across the U.S. between Feb. 10, and Mar. 11, 2009

Main Clusters Used for Survey Modeling and Data Analysis

- Law Enforcement and National Security
- Economy
- Social Integration
- Ethnic Prejudice

Important Immigration Policies Included in the Social Climate Survey

- 1. Deportation
- 2. Penalizing Employers of Undocumented Immigrants
- 3. Border Fence
- 4. Border Patrol
- 5. Family Reunification
- 6. Access to Social Goods (education, health, welfare)

A Guide to Interpreting Social Climate Items:

Major findings:

- ❑ SCSHI Depicts population with complex and in some cases conflicted views about Hispanic immigration.
- ❑ Citizens hold sharper negative and restrictive attitudes and beliefs for illegal/undocumented immigrants.
- ❑ Citizens believe that most Hispanic immigrants are undocumented.
- ❑ Higher restrictive measures on law enforcement and national security.
- ❑ Conflicted view's on the nation's economy.
- ❑ More positive attitudes when it comes for family values and some cultural aspects.
- ❑ More positive for legal/documentated immigrants.
